230 Julian Pitt-Rivers Book of the Courtier) by Baldassar Castiglione (Castiglione (1987) [1528]). The criteria of honour vary not only according to the country and therefore the society and the culture, but according to the social status of the individuals concerned. To begin with, the honour of a man is not at all the same as that of a woman.

10 Paper P.94, 229.

The Oxford-trained anthropologist Julian Pitt-Rivers, scion of a venerable English family whose forebears may well have participated in the culture of honor in the nineteenth century, capitalized on the evocativeness of ‘honor.’ He reintroduced the word in a wide-ranging essay that drew principally on data from early modern European history.

J. G. Peristiany, Julian Pitt-Rivers (eds.) Little has been written about honour in the social sciences and almost nothing about grace. Yet honour has caused more deaths than the plague and grace is what we all yearn for, whether in the form of favor, luck, pardon, gratuity, or salvation. This collection of essays develops a line of thought in anthropology which was opened in the 1960s by the editors (and some of the same contributors) in Honor and Shame: The Values of a Mediterranean Society.
